

Finishing touches

Brian Gallien, of Ironwood Restoration in Marlow, N.H., works to rebuild the bandstand in Claremont's Broad Street Park. The $33,500 project to restore the structure after its roof was blown off during a 1999 storm is nearly complete. No original design plans for the 75-year-old gazebo could be found, so Gallien, who has been working solo on the project for months, had to start from scratch by taking measurements. Additional ceiling work, painting and copper roofing installation will take place this month. A concert was held at the site in August. (Wayne Carter photos)

